Futuristic Security Council

I. Committee Goal

The main purpose of this committee is to see how political or technological decisions can affect or create the issues of the future. The Futuristic Security Council allows delegates to realize the influence and role that our current era has on defining the future. Delegates must envision the current reality and examine it from a different perspective, a perspective that considers the long term repercussions of current problems and possible solutions. It forces delegates to ask themselves: if we continue on our current path, where will we end up?

II. Committee Procedure

The Futuristic Security Council will try to create what we believe is a realistic Security Council set in the future by using our current social and political context to stem our fictional conflicts. Meaning that delegates who participate in this committee will talk and debate about issues that might be somewhat insignificant or even in their initial stages right now but might have long lasting effects on the world.

III. Delegate Preparation

For the Futuristic Security Council delegates should prepare as if they were going to the Security Council. The Futuristic Security Council has the same procedures and preparations as the Security Council, so delegates should not expect anything different. The delegates should research about the topic they are going to be debating (if possible) and learn as much as possible to be ready for the debate. However, there is one small difference between the SC and FSC, although in the Security Council there might be countries that already exist, be on the lookout for countries that do not currently exist. These countries will have just as much say as all of the other ones but do not get alarmed if you see one that you have never heard of before.
